Introduction to Theme

“Innovate or Perish” is the mantra in organizations today. Innovation in business means the process of translating an idea or invention into a good or service that creates value or for which customers will pay. Thus Innovation must lead to “Growth” in an organization. Innovation is integral to sustainability and the two can work in partnership. In order to stand out in the changing landscape, companies need to think about sustainable practices in order to achieve their desired growth.

It is clear that sustainability as an important driver in value creation but differentiation of products and services will help a company to lead in the competition, and this can be achieved through innovation. Innovations can either be sustaining, or they can be disruptive. Both types of innovation are important because they add value to the company, but disruptive innovation opens up new roads that organizations may not have considered.

Perpetual growth is incompatible with the finite world we live in. The creation of products and services requires the use of natural resources and therefore will always come at an environmental cost. In business, growth must sustain growth, meaning resources must continue to be used in order to keep growth up infinitely. We currently use resources three times faster than they are replaced by the Earth, which is clearly unsustainable. Business relies on ecological and environmental resources in order to survive. However, Business tends to forget this in the midst of their search for short-term fulfillment through economic growth and materialistic need. The aim of the Conference is to look into Innovative Sustainable Growth in various fields of Business and Society.
