The greatest challenge that humanity faces today is that we plan and carry out activities in a manner compatible with the Earth's resource systems. Despite the fact that the concept of sustainable growth has been developed and studied for several decades now, its practical application still seems limited and meaningful targets have not been met : indeed, we are still operating unsustainably. With the awareness that we must rethink our social and economic systems in order to make economic and social development more resource efficient and more equitable to all, both across the planet and in future generations, the conference will bring together all the stakeholders for addressing the issues of how to face the global economic, social and environmental challenges of sustainability.
